

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS FOR THE AWARD OF RESEARCH FELLOWSHIPS
Regulation on Research Fellowships pursuant to Italian Law no. 240/2010
Politecnico di Bari, issued by Rectoral Decree no. 252 of 05/07/2016

Rectoral Decree no. 1432/2023

Purpose

Applications are invited for the selection running at:

-n. 1 professional grant research fellowship, for the execution of research activities within the project entitled: "Friction Stir Welding of Dissimilar Alloys and Materials for automotive application", according to the annexed Activity Programme:

"The rapid growth of the electric mobility (e-mobility) sector has been fueled by a global push for cleaner and more sustainable transportation solutions. As electric vehicles (EVs) become increasingly popular, manufacturers face challenges in optimizing vehicle design, efficiency, and safety. One crucial aspect in e-mobility engineering is the joining of dissimilar materials to create lightweight yet sturdy structures. Friction stir welding (FSW) of dissimilar joints emerges as a promising technology that offers numerous advantages for advancing e-mobility and realizing a greener future. FSW is a solid-state joining process that uses a nonconsumable tool to generate frictional heat and mechanically stir the materials together, creating a strong 5 bond without melting the base metals. This technique has been successfully applied to various dissimilar material combinations, including aluminum-steel, aluminum-copper, and magnesium-steel, offering several benefits for the automotive industry, such as: greater joint strength, greater efficiency and better environmental sustainability. In the automotive industry, Friction Stir Welding (FSW) offers a wide range of potential applications, including battery enclosures, engine components, and chassis and body structures. This research project aims to explore the possibilities of dissimilar joints produced using Friction Stir Welding (FSW) within the automotive industry. Specifically, the project will concentrate on the following areas: • Determining the optimal process parameters to achieve high-quality joints. • Investigating the morphology and mechanical characteristics of the joints. • Conducting simulations and thermal analyses. The anticipated outcomes include the development of lightweight and safe vehicles, decreased energy consumption, and advancements in the automotive sector. The grant holder will play an active role in ensuring the project's success by actively participating in research and experimental activities and collaborating closely with the research team to attain the predefined objectives. More specifically, his responsibilities will encompass sample preparation, the execution of FSW welds, and the collection of experimental data. Following this, he will conduct data analyses using specialized statistical tools and software, in addition to performing further tests to assess the quality of dissimilar joints and to characterize the materials involved. The grant holder will also be instrumental in developing models and conducting Finite Element Method (FEM) simulations to gain deeper insights into the behavior of dissimilar joints".

The call for applications for the research fellowship issued pursuant to the University Regulation issued by Rectoral Decree (D.R.) no. 252/2016.

The activities shall be carried out under the supervision of a tutor, Scientific Manager Prof. Giuseppe Casalino in a non-subordinate relationship with no set working hours.

The main place of work will be: Department of mechanics, mathematics and management of the Politecnico di Bari, via Orabona,4, Bari, Italy
